Where to go?

"I was fascinated by India. Going there was a very settling experience. I went there for a spiritual trip more than a sight-seeing trip. So, it was a spiritual experience for me. The time I spent on the Ganges will stay with me forever," Hollywood star Morgan Freeman can be quoted from a recent interview.

India has something for everyone, not just for those who come looking for spirituality. So, where to go in this vast country is always a challenging problem for most travellers. The answer is not that simple, but our attempt is to make it easier for you to decide.

Mountains - Spreading across three countries, travel eastwards to find a less travelled side of the majestic Himalayas. Endowed with the highest mountains of the world, there is everything a mountain lover can dream of. Take a look at our Himalayan trip ideas on the Trip Planner.

History: For those who feel thrilled in the ruins of a middle age fort, there is more than thrill on offer. You will find forts where the King and Queen still lives (but not ruling, of course) and you will find places where fierce battles were fought in a time long long ago. You will find ruins of ancient cities where mighty kings once ruled in a thriving world that was, almost completely unknown to the west.

India's vast coastline on either sides (East and West) provide one of the best beach experiences you can imagine. The Western Coastal Plains extend 1,500 km from Cape Kumarin in the south to Surat in the north but the west coast is so much more. A coastal belt with a sociological and natural diversity that it can give Sir Attenborough a run for his money. From the fiery Konkani fish curry to Pork Sorpotel everything is right here on this belt.
